The new editor is the product of Adobe's acquisition of Acorn, a company renowned for its graphics-intensive web publishing software. More than 2.7 million people use Elements, according to Adobe figures. However, users have been complaining that, for some time, Elements has been slow to improve, with user interface features remaining largely stagnant despite years of development. Photoshop changed format Now that the software has been bought by another company, it is expected it will undergo a major re-launch similar to that of the switch from Macintosh Classic to NeXT, the original developer of the MacOS operating system. Mozilla recently released the source code for the popular Firefox web browser, which caused a stir among creative professionals with regards to the future of the browser. The Firefox browser, although an example of an open-source product, is no longer developed by the same company that originally developed it. The US firm, Mozilla, bought the development process from the Canadian company, Netscape, and it controls it to the benefit of non-commercial and open-source projects. However, the source code was leaked by an unknown party and the controversy over the method of its publication was heightened when some developers said they did not want to forgo commercial gains for open-source benefits. This has caused a split, which was exploited by a company called PhoneGap that raised over $3.7m on Kickstarter to create a new project on the basis of open source. This project has raised some concerns as to how the developer will benefit from the project. The whole process also invited some criticism as the so-called open source project is still based on a proprietary environment, which is no longer being developed by its own company. The future of Open-source projects is now in the hands of individual developers, or as the case may be, the company behind the project will have to make the decision in favour of consumer benefits or commercial benefits. Many businesses run Linux servers on premise and use open-source software in their daily operations. However, when these companies buy or build new servers, they must usually buy commercial software licenses. Linux is an operating system that is used by companies and hackers alike to build servers with open-source software on. It was originally created by Linus Torvalds, and it is now owned by the Open-Source Initiative. However, the commercial side of this project is a huge risk a681f4349e

Q: Stub a parameter in PHPUnit I have the following code public function SomeMethod($arg1, $arg2) { if ($arg1 == 1) { $arg1 = $arg2; } } And I want to test it so that $arg1 is used instead of $arg2. My phpunit setup method is as follows: protected function setUp() { $this->container = $this->getMock('App\Container'); $this->container->expects($this->any())->method('make')->will($this->returnValue($this->container)); $this->container->expects($this->any())->method('get')->will($this->returnValue($this->container)); $this->someMethod = new Class; } So far so good. But how do I stub $arg1? A: I assume that you need to mock your code under test. For this you will need to do a few things to be able to use a type hint with mocks. First and foremost you need to create a class called ParameterMock so that you can mock type hints. This class should extend the built in PHPUnit_Framework_MockObject_MockObject class ParameterMock extends PHPUnit_Framework_MockObject_MockObject This allows you to create a mock object and still be able to write type hints. $parameterMock = new ParameterMock(); $parameterMock->expects($this->any())->method('getSomething')->with($this->equalTo('something'))->will($this->returnValue(false)); You can then use these type hints on your test method: public function testGivenParameterAndAnotherAreEqual() { $parameterMock = new ParameterMock(); $parameterMock->expects($this->any())->method('getSomething')->with($this->equalTo('something'))
