High-output, high-pressure sodium lamps have a discharge envelope of ceramic material such as alumina. To create an optimum vacuum in the envelope, the envelope is sealed to a light reflector mounted at the ceramic shell. The reflector usually consists of a wafer-like body of steel or nickel coated with a layer of silver. The reflector is fixed inside a yoke, and a ceramic sleeve is inserted into the yoke. The internal diameter of the sleeve is slightly smaller than the outside diameter of the reflector, but the sleeve can be inserted into the yoke to form a tight joint with the reflector. Both the light reflector and the ceramic shell are, for the most part, hermetically sealed with glass. As is well known in the art, the
