FIFA is a football video game series published by EA Canada. First released in September of 1994 for the SNES, the series has since released on the SNES, N64, GameBoy, PlayStation, PlayStation 2, and PlayStation 3. Currently, the series is available on PC, Xbox 360, Xbox One, and PlayStation 4. FIFA games are closely related to their real-life counterparts; many of the same top football clubs featured in the games are also featured in the real world and many of the players from the games are real-life players who also happen to play for the same clubs as their video game counterparts. EA Sports' annual release of FIFA games is a favorite among the world football community. Since 2014, each game in the franchise has received either a "Gold Edition", a completely remastered edition, or a "Technical Kit" edition. This edition serves as a collectors' item because the game features a new cover art as well as improved graphics and other enhanced features. Beyond the games and FIFA Ultimate Team, the FIFA series also includes spin-off games such as FIFA Street, Pro Evolution Soccer, EA SPORTS FIFA, and EA SPORTS FIFA World Cup. The games are also featured in the FIFA series of television shows. The television series primarily air on ESPN and Fox Sports and are produced by Stoopid Buddy Stoodios (now also the producers of the series The Tick, BoJack Horseman, The Heart, Hands & Feet, and Children's Hospital). Gameplay While the games feature a simulation-style game system (that is, the AI takes into account the attributes of a real-life player and compares him/her with real-life statistics and player ratings to make a choice of either controlling the real-life player or one of a number of pre-defined "player templates" or "player archetypes"), the player's ability to play is not controlled by the in-game control scheme, which is unrealistic. The strategy used in the game is called Evaluation and Selection (E&S). FIFA 22 also introduces a new set of 3D commentators, commentators who provide a tactical view of the game. Four commentators are available for both the real world and FIFA game: Ian Darke, David Pleat, Ian Darke, and Danny Gallanagh. The player can also use their skill to play the game with an Evolved Skill Game or eSG, a unique player skill system similar to FIFA 16's "Gal
